Ten Clean Energy Stocks I'd Buy Now

Buying opportunities return to clean energy.

Two years ago I had a problem. In the universe of clean energy stocks I watch, I could not find any that I thought were good values. So I wrote an article saying "We're near the peak."

If you had been comparing that call to the performance of the broad stock market since then, you would have to conclude that I was ludicrously wrong. The S&P 500 is up 40% since then.

If on the other hand, you'd been watching clean energy stocks, you would have found that the overall trend has been flat to down. The PowerShares Clean Energy (PBW) ETF has basically been flat since then, while solar (TAN) and wind (FAN) ETFs are each down about 20%.

I mention all this because I notice something new, that hasn't happened for almost two years: I'm again finding clean energy stocks that I think are bargains. I think the sector and the market as a whole still have a lot of room to fall, but I'm encouraged to finally have companies to write about that I think are worth buying again.
